GIN

London Dry Gin is what most people think of as “gin.” They are typically very dry, heavily juniper flavoured, light in body, & aromatic. To get the flowery, botanical flavour, this style of gin is typically infused with various aromatic ingredients during the 2nd or 3rd distillation process, giving each brand its own unique taste.

Old Tom Gin is a sweeter cousin to London Dry Gin & is appropriately named as it was the preferred gin in a Tom Collins.

Hayman's Old Tom UK 12

Sloe Gin is made from ripe sloes, which are traditionally picked after the first frost of winter, late October to early November in the northern hemisphere. Each sloe is pricked, traditionally with a thorn taken from the blackthorn bush on which they grow. An alternative folktale says that one should not prick the sloes with a metal fork unless it is made of silver.

GIN

International or Contemporary Style Gin is an umbrella term used to refer to all the new styles of gin that use the same base distilling process but are predominantly infused with flavours other than juniper berries. The most common one you might be familiar with is Hendrick's, flavoured with cucumber & rose.
